

Climate Change and Girl's Education

A change in climate and the average weather patterns globally. This is rapidly changing due to human activities enhancing the greenhouse effect. CO₂ is the type of greenhouse gas which factories and cars creates.

Women are often a second priority after men. This means in an event of disaster, women are more likely to be forgotten. Also they get poorer education and often are victims of early marriage, human trafficking and sexual violence.

- Gender Inequality

Relationship Between Climate Change and Gender Inequality:

↳ Climate change and gender inequalities can affect each other.

For example, countries can be affected by climate change and lose income. Then, that can make families let go of their daughters by marrying her off or human trafficking to save and earn money. Women can also be targeted easily as they are thought to be weaker. If gender inequality didn't exist, there are more chances of women with great ideas to be heard. This means it could lead to finding solutions to climate change. If climate change gets solved, there won't be severe gender inequality as it is likely for a country to be financially pressured. Solving one of the problems can lead to solving another.

What we want to tell:

Climate change isn't just about polar bears. It is also about humans suffering from the economic and social issues due to climate change. We need to start ACTING. Our species are suffering because of us.

Climate change is a cycle we need to get out of. The lack of education available for girls makes less contribution, leading to their future generation being poor. Education that provides knowledge helps people to understand and empower their abilities and attitudes to act as agents of change. To the extent that we enjoy the freedom and live happily ever after, we have to pay for the freedom that we are enjoying as we are paying for the materials that we need. Freedom always comes with responsibilities.
